

Postgraduate Medical Journal* call for papers – Infectious Diseases special issue

Postgraduate Medical Journal (pmj.bmj.com), published by BMJ on behalf of the Fellowship of Postgraduate Medicine, is committed to ongoing medical education across the whole range of specialties. Our policy is to provide a broad mix of articles that will be of educational value to specialists and trainees and to assist continuing professional development.

The journal is currently planning a special issue on the topic of Infectious Disease, for publication in autumn 2020. We would welcome in particular papers relating to any aspect of novel coronavirus SARS-CoV-2 (COVID-19). The submission deadline for the issue is 30 May 2020.

Prospective authors are welcome to submit a pre-submission enquiry about their paper by emailing the Editorial Office: pmj@bmj.com. For more information on article types and formatting, see the Instructions for Authors.

Publishing with PMJ will ensure high visibility for your research. You can be assured of rapid turnaround times and rapid, thorough peer review. Once accepted, your paper will be fast-tracked through production (mean time from acceptance to online publication is 3 weeks). There are no publication charges, although authors may opt to make their work open access upon publication, if desired (see here for details of charges).

The Editor-in-Chief, Professor Bernard Cheung, the Associate Editors and the Editorial Advisory Board look forward to receiving your paper.

Submit your manuscript here.